CAVAL HR Group Workshop

Research data management:

What does it mean for the librarian?

Research data management is an emerging area in universities worldwide and libraries are among the stakeholders supporting the area because of their information management expertise. But what is involved in supporting the area?

The CAVAL HR Group invites you to participate in a lively workshop that introduces the activities involved in supporting research data management. We also explore the possible roles and development needs of library staff working in this area.

The workshop is designed to be of interest to a wide range of library staff including staff working in liaison roles as well as others wanting to broaden their knowledge about the area more generally.

Program

2.00-2.05p.m.	Welcome and Introduction. Sandra Woods – Learning and Development Consultant, University of Melbourne Library and Chair of the HR Group.
2.05-2.40p.m.	Simon Huggard - Digital Infrastructure Manager, La Trobe University. What's involved in research data management and what skills do librarians need to support it?
